This book is the first of Butrous foundation's Journeys Trilogy. The three volumes are particularly for those aged 12 to 20 who are inspired to have careers in science or to use the path of science in other careers.

Young scientists of the past talk to today's young scientists about the future. The authors were members of the Student Science Society in high school in Thailand in the 1960s, and now, near their own 60s, they share the most important things they learned about science specifically and life generally during their own young scientist journeys in the years since they published The SSS Bulletin, a scientific journal for the International School Bangkok. The Butrous Foundation was established in 2006 to empower young scientists. It is directed by Ghazwan Butrous, who is Professor of Cardiopulmonary Sciences at the University of Kent, Canterbury, United Kingdom.
