Are we obliged to continue with Einstein's scientifically and philosophically failing principles which nowadays constitute outdated mistakes? Special Relativity Theory and General Relativity Theory can be useful only as approximation gimmicks, which are nevertheless unsuitable for accurate and all-encompassing consistent physical theory. Adherence to relativistic theory is blocking the development of the unifying theory of everything. Treating no orthodoxy as sacrosanct, Joop F Nieland cuts through decades of muddled thinking by physicists determined to reconcile new theories with old, even when that task is futile. He demonstrates the omnipresence of the 'aether' and offers a neo-classically formulated aether version of Coulomb's theory. Vacuum Refraction Theory of Gravitation and Cosmology, he says, uses vacuum space-physics, Euclidean geometry and quantitative differentiations of every mass object. It is incompatible with the geometry of Einstein's General Relativity Theory or with any amended version. Once that is accepted, science is free to delve deeper and explore further into the secrets of the physical universe and in the philosophical Universe and move closer than ever before to the formulation of a single super theory.
