In Book Four Lucy digs her heels in – after her temporary stint as Kane’s assistant investigator she’s set her sights on making the position permanent. Seems like her motto ‘persistence pays off’ is about to be proved correct. Meanwhile, Don and Lisa Maddox’s idyllic marriage is threatened when Lisa is targeted by blackmailers, and Boston private detective Mark Kane is hired to investigate – but he soon realizes that he is investigating more than just blackmail, and finds himself searching for a serial killer as well – and with trouble at the office too it’s one headache after another. But who is responsible for the bizarre deaths? And what secret is Lisa so desperate to hide from her husband? Kane and his newly appointed assistant investigator Lucy head west to The Twin Cities to look for answers but they are plagued with setbacks and are met with a wall of silence. As Lucy observes, “It’s as if some malign force keeps putting obstacles in our way.” But Kane and Lucy must find a way forward if they are to thwart the blackmailers and find the killer.
